

have capitalized on this analysis as a money-making opportunity by short-selling selected stocks using contracts for difference (CFD). We published our analysis in last month's edition for the benefit of readers using Sing Holdings as a short-selling example. The short-selling of that stock had generated very decent profits indeed.

During such strong downtrends in the market, profits can be made from short-selling using CFD. As we are confident and precise with our analysis of the market trend, we had conducted a 'Short-Selling Using CFD' course at SMU (Singapore Management University) on 5 January 2008 to specifically impart the necessary knowledge and skills for our students to capture the market momentum. A total of 350 students attended the course, and on the same occasion, we also launched our new version of the TRADAR software 1.7 to help the students in their trading. This version has powerful filters to select the stocks that are suitable for short-selling. It has been our approach to combine training and powerful software to help our students make good profits from the stock market. A few of the stocks we selected as illustrations during the class on 5 January 2008 were Sing Holdings, Wing Tai Holdings, Singapore Exchange Ltd., All Green Properties, Singapore Airlines, and Man Wah, among others. All the stocks have generated huge return by now. You can refer to the charts for the short-selling examples of Wing Tai Holdings and Singapore Exchange Lt.

We would like to caution readers that the major market trend now is downward and any rebound is likely to be temporary. It is an opportunity to sell in strength or short-sell. We are trend traders, so follow the trend, as trend is our friend.

In our classes, we also highlight the psychology and money management aspects of short-selling. Do contact us if you are interest to attend our future short-selling classes. SI

Example 1: Wing Tai Holdings: We spotted on 4 January 2008 for the class on 5 January 2008. Shorted at 2.62

Example 2: Singapore Exchange Ltd: We spotted on 4 January 2008 for the class on 5 January 2008. Shorted at 11.90
